Editors Are Appointed To Post's News Desks

New assignments in some of the principal editorships of The Washington Post were announced yesterday by executive editor Benjamin C. Bradlee.

Ben Bagdikian, 49, press critic and former writer for the Saturday Evening Post and The Providence Journal, was named national editor.

Harry M. Rosenfeld, 40, formerly foreign editor, was named metropolitan editor, succeeding Stephen D. Isaacs, 32, who was appointed editor of the Sunday magazine Potomac.

J. W. Anderson, 41, formerly city editor, was appointed foreign editor.

Rosenfeld, a former foreign editor of the New York Herald Tribune, came to The Washington Post in 1966 and was appointed foreign editor a year ago.

Isaacs came to The Washington Post in 1961 after serving as a reporter for various British newspapers.

Anderson came to The Washington Post in 1957 after a congressional fellowship of the American Political Science Association. He is a former reporter for the Reading, Pa., Times.
